I've attended many planning committee meetings for the past five years. I applaud the committee for plodding through, usually in a thoughtful manner, during some pretty angst filled meetings.

I think it's important for all to remember, this is not a binding book of rules, merely suggestions, collectively gathered by members of the community. It well reflects the general values, a wild, rural community. I think the documents generally reflects the majority of the community.

I especially like the wildlife friendly fencing suggestion, as one who has cut more elk than is/was necessary out of bad fencing. It's wonderful the residents have a place to go to learn about options, perhaps even grant money to help with making their decisions. Links to such sites might be helpful.

This is a fire prone landscape, property owners need to continue to educate themselves, and/or take advantage of programs in place to minimize their risks.

As a landowner and resident for the past 40 years, i think this is a reflective document of the majority of residents. It could be tweaked forever, and not every one will agree with the document word for word. It's a pretty solid document as it stands, and we need to move forward.

Thank you

I also feel that no comment from residents, land owners means they accept document as is, or don't care to participate.

All have been given ample opportunity.
