What we do

JUST Response connects members of the justice system and community to solve problems, build relationships, share information, and seek training in order to respond to relationship violence, sexual violence, and child abuse in a cohesive way.

What guides our work in our three focus areas

How JUST Response works

Identify issues. Implement solutions.
Focused teams that get work done related to the tasks of that team. Share information with MDT.

Share Information.
Build relationships. Discuss issues and solutions. Share information.

Pass on Information.
Take JUST Response information back to colleagues. Continue system analysis and monitor change.

JUST Response Teams 2015

JUST Response creates a comprehensive response to violence by identifying systemic issues and implementing solutions rooted in best practices. Focused, active work groups are comprised of staff from member agencies who collaborate to carry out this work. These groups utilize our local experts and leaders and strive for cohesive, efficient, and victim-centered work.

In addition to what is represented below, there will soon be a Policy team and a Training team. Both are overseen by the Advisory Board which will ensure our policies and training are consistent between departments.
